The sayings of the knowledge-holders have been transmitted over the ages through ideas and symbols.

Ideas and symbols have power and energy. There are ways, systems, or manners by which ideas and symbols serve as manifestations, configurations, and stimulators of power and energy.

Ideas and symbols are in their own way living phenomena. They are conceived, they gestate, they are born, they mature, and they die. Some lie dormant for thousands of years and then are resurrected.

Cultures and civilizations are built upon and around ideas and symbols.
